What Is FUE

FUE, or Follicular Unit Extraction, is an innovative hair transplant procedure that restores natural hair growth without the need for stitches or a linear scar. Instead of removing a strip of skin, your doctor carefully extracts individual hair follicles from a donor site, usually the back or sides of your scalp, and places them in the areas where you want more coverage.

The result is soft, natural regrowth that blends seamlessly with your existing hair. Because it's a minimally invasive procedure, recovery is faster, discomfort is low, and there are no visible signs once healing is complete.

How the FUE Process Works

Consultation and Planning Your experience begins with a personal consultation. You'll meet directly with your Maxim surgeon, who will examine your scalp, discuss your goals, and design a plan that suits your hair type, density, and preferred look.	Harvesting Healthy Hair Once your plan is set, we identify a donor area where the follicles are strong and healthy. Using state-of-the-art tools, your doctor gently removes each follicle one by one. The process is done under local anesthesia, so you'll be awake and comfortable the whole time.
Placement and Design Each follicle is then carefully placed into the thinning areas. The doctor controls the angle, depth, and direction of every graft to make sure the new growth follows your	Recovery and Growth You can return home the same day and resume light activity within a couple of days. Frequently Asked Questions

How is FUE different from other hair restoration methods?

FUE is a precise and minimally invasive procedure that extracts individual follicular units rather than a strip of skin. This means faster recovery, minimal scarring, and natural-looking results.

Will the procedure hurt?

Local anesthesia keeps you comfortable throughout the process. Most patients describe only mild pressure or tingling. Afterward, any soreness is usually minimal and fades quickly.

When will I see results?

Most patients start to notice new hair growth after a few months. By the one-year mark, your hairline and density should look fuller and natural.

Can FUE also be used for beards or facial hair?

Yes. The Follicular Unit Extraction method is commonly used to fill in thin or patchy beard areas using your own donor hair. The results blend naturally and allow for normal trimming and grooming once healing is complete.

How does Maxim choose the best FUE technology for my hair?

Every patient's hair restoration procedure is customized. During your free consultation, the surgeon evaluates your scalp, hair thinning pattern, and healthy hair follicles to decide which FUE method - WAW, ATERA, or another system - will deliver the best outcome. The goal is always to achieve natural, lasting growth with minimal downtime.

Will my transplanted hair look and feel natural?

Yes. Once healing is complete, your transplanted hair will grow just like the rest of your natural hair because it is your hair. Each graft is carefully placed to match your existing growth pattern, direction, and density. This attention to detail ensures seamless blending
